Intensive In-Home Services uses a multi-systemic approach in planning and implementing individualized services. Treatment components may include individual and family in-home counseling, crisis intervention, substance abuse treatment, life skills training and case coordination. Flexibility, availability and responsiveness to the individual needs of each youth, family and community are crucial to success.

The program's collaborative systems approach involves both the internal family system and a community network. In-home counselors develop and implement a service plan approach that makes use of family strengths, the special skills and abilities of the staff and existing community resources.

- Trauma Informed Care;
- Evidence-Based Practices;
- Comprehensive Assessment;
- Case coordination with all systems of care involved with the client;
- Home and community-based sessions;
- Teaching functional skills and appropriate behavior related to individuals health and safety.
